BARNHAVEN OFFERS YOU AN ENCHANTED SPRING WITH THE WORLD'S MOST BEAUTIFUL PRIMROSES

--the original and only Silver-Dollar primroses blooming from late winter to early summer in your shadier garden spots

In 1961, seeds may be had direct from Barnhaven, Gresham, Oregon. Large plants, for spring 1961 bloom from Walter Marx Gardens, Boring, Oregon. Order from this folder. Catalog #16 out of supply.

HAT OLD spring magic worked early this year. The magic of color. The magic of fragrance. The magic of primroses blooming on a cold and windy hill in January. Budding in pure pinks and true blues, brilliant coppers and vibrant, velvet-rich plum and wood violet shades. Scarlets and vermillion, orange and gold, coral and peach beyond the splendor we trod under foot on the Great Barrier Reef and gathered in the Australian bush and South Seas these past eight months.

To the larger-than-dollar size and elegance of Barnhaven primroses have been added even more shades and tints. And a provocative fragrance seems to cling to larger numbers investing them with a flower's crowning glory.

Springtime is nature's universal seed sowing time. Mild-climate gardeners can sow the year around, and cold-climate gardeners can sow in late fall and winter. But everyone can sow in the spring and know that when they order pink primroses, or blue primroses or any color primroses from Barnhaven, the following spring they will bloom in all the nuances of these colors. The joy of flowering your own work is unbounded. Yet, many have time only to garden with mature plants. For them, Silver-Dollar primroses may be had from Walter Marx Gardens. Whichever way you transform your shadier sites into bewitching beauty you will have, like the gentleman from Connecticut, one of those "Oh My Gardens" to pleasure you and all those who see it.
